Introduction

The Miller Center is making diversity, equity, and inclusion an organizational priority as it approaches its 50th anniversary.

We aim to improve on recent efforts to create a more diverse and inclusive organization—in our personnel, in our values and culture, and in our public programming and scholarship.

As a highly visible center at UVA, we feel a responsibility to lead in this area. That is why we will make it a priority to demonstrate consistent progress across our personnel, our culture, and our public programming.

Self-Assessment

Over the last five years, the Miller Center has taken important steps in moving our organization in the direction of one that is truly inclusive. We have recruited a number of talented women and minorities to our leadership teams; to our faculty, fellows, and staff; and to our Governing Council. We have addressed cultural challenges at the Center, taking early steps in transforming an organization that was often top-down and opaque to one that is explicitly inclusive and transparent.

But we know that we can and must do more. Because of our visibility as an organization dedicated to public affairs, we feel a responsibility to lead.

The Miller Center faculty, staff, and fellows adopted a Center-wide values document in the spring of 2019, with this guiding statement: "The Miller Center is a supportive community, grounded in diverse perspectives. We value scholarly excellence, civil discourse, and respectful conduct." This values statement reflects a year of work to better understand personal and professional needs of our community and actions to foster a compassionate team. The work is not done, and the Miller Center is committed to continually reviewing and improving practices of scholarly excellence, diverse perspectives, purposeful engagement, responsible stewardship, supportive community, and respectful conduct.

Aligning with this vision and our strategic plan adopted in April 2020, the Miller Center has created an Inclusive Excellence plan. This reflects contributions from representatives across the Center: scholarship, technology, public programs, the Workplace Culture Committee (WCC), and the executive office. The Center kicked off the process in January 2020 with a 1:1 consultation followed by a workshop. We offered participation to all faculty and staff, landing on five key representatives of the Center. We then began intensive work as a team in July 2020, first evaluating progress to date and current tools the Center can access. In consultation with the Office of Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion, plus specialists in categories, we established goals and ways to measure success, documented below.

Current strengths

- Public programming and panel diversity: At the beginning of each semester, we discuss the topics we will address in our public programming. Over the last several years, we have looked at topics of racial inclusion, immigration and related issues, the various facets of inequality, and of the role of women in politics as essential features of American public life, including as areas of focus connected to our strength in the American presidency. We have focused on diversifying representation on our panels in recent years, with positive results. In 2018, 25 percent of our total events were diverse by racial and/or ethnic markers (identified by events featuring speakers of Black, Hispanic, Asian, or another ethnic origin), and 54 percent of programs were diverse by gender. In 2019, we made significant gains with racial and/or ethnic diversity increasing to 46 percent, with 70 percent of programs featuring gender diversity. In 2020, 35 percent of event panels included racial and/or ethnic diversity, with 72 percent displaying gender diversity. One program worth noting, because of its size and reach, was the Center's three-day 2019 Presidential Ideas Festival, which brought in more than 90 speakers; 37 percent were women and more than 20 percent represented minority groups.
- Personnel diversity as a priority: We have established faculty, fellow, staff diversity as a priority. Five years ago, the senior staff leadership included seven men and one woman, and our full-time and affiliated faculty and fellows included only four women. We have made some progress: today, the senior leadership team is equally represented by men and women and includes one African American. As an organization, we have observed that our faculty and fellows (both full time and affiliates) now include 14 women (out of 40, or 35 percent), three African Americans, two Asian Americans, and one person of Hispanic descent. We have done this at an organization that remains committed to philosophically diverse political views.
- Transparent policies and procedures: Beginning in late 2018, the Center invested significant time in formalizing processes, from the basics of ordering office supplies to high-stakes work such as the selection of senior fellows. By fall 2020, the Center had documented 24 systems at the Center to make processes transparent and understandable.
- Community Awareness: Because we have focused faculty and staff on inclusivity, equity, camaraderie, and values, we are simply more aware of these issues as an organization. It has allowed us to consider these priorities in programming, in relationships with fellows and scholars, and in recruiting volunteer leadership. We have hosted training sessions and moderated discussions, attended by a majority of the Center's personnel. As a result, we researched, recorded, and disseminated a history of the Center so we know the roots of our organization.
- Cultural change: The Center has taken on cultural change as a priority, most evident in the formation of the WCC and creation of a values statement. This work began in earnest with unconscious bias training in May 2017, at which time we reworked the weekly meetings to include more staff, including an optional faculty and staff meeting every Monday. Since September 2017, we have required online Respect@, Title IX, and Preventing and Addressing Discrimination, Harassment, and Retaliation (PADHR) training annually. Title IX training started in January 2018 for all faculty and staff, followed in April 2018, when the Governing Council attended its first annual training. In January 2018, the Governing Council approved a Code of Conduct, which each member signs annually. Two of the past three Governing Council chairs have directly addressed inclusivity and culture with the staff. The WCC has reported at All Hands and board meetings regularly since September 2018. We include a culture section in our Week Ahead email to all members of our community, which began in November 2018. Since 2018 we have hosted sessions with UVA Faculty and Employee Assistance (FEAP), learned best practices from the UVA Nursing School, engaged UVA Talent Development, created an Action Plan with the UVA office of Equal Opportunity and Civil Rights (EOCR) office, offered bystander training, and hosted management team coaching sessions. A third party led the Center in a series of restorative practice sessions, which inspired the WCC to conduct "circles," a space to share and support one another during spring and fall semesters in FY20 and FY21.

Current challenges

- Wider staff engagement: The Workplace Culture Committee is a robust, active group, but not all members of the Miller Center have embraced the WCC. It remains a challenge to pull in the entire community and inspire each person to participate.
- Constrained finances: The financial security of the Center affects recruitment and other novel opportunities. New full-time staff are not common at the Center, as a result of strong retention and limited financial resources. This also limits opportunities for more professional development and social gatherings. Despite these challenges, the Center continues to make progress on inclusivity through workshops, recognition, and staff activities. We still have work to do in faculty, fellow, and staff diversity. As of November 2020, the Center has 40 full-time-equivalent faculty and staff and 32 affiliated fellows. While we have observed that nearly half of our full-time employees are women, our full-time employees were still more than 90 percent White in November 2020. Since recruitment opportunities are somewhat limited, the greatest opportunity lies in retention: making sure people with differing political philosophies and affiliations, a range of life experiences, and underrepresented races each feel welcome, feel included, and feel they have a voice.

Greatest opportunities

 Goal-setting progress: We considered the organizational climate assessment provided by the Division for Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion and determined that Stage 4:
 Affirming is the most representative of our current organization. We have made an active commitment to recognizing difference as an advantage and our faculty and staff have cultural awareness. This is a milestone, since 70 percent of UVA rates itself at

- Stage 3: Compliance. But our work is not done. We have an opportunity to move into Stage 5: Redefining, and then Stage 6: Inclusive.
- Governing Council diversity: Volunteer leadership is an essential part of the Miller Center, as with other parts of UVA. The Center's board, called the Governing Council, has been built by engaged, invested professionals who believe in the mission of the Center. In the past, we prioritized networking and connections in selecting the Council. Since 2018, the governance and nominating committee—staffed by the executive office—has tracked a range of factors in evaluating current board strengths and considering new candidates. These factors include past service to a political party; geographic residence; business sector; gender, race and ethnicity; and other factors. Assessing the current makeup of the board has identified needs, and the committee has been reasonably successful in bringing in a broader range of voices. Like all corporate and volunteer boards in 2020 and 2021, we have a strategic objective to prioritize this work.
- Expanded event audience: We control the topics and themes of our public programs, and also the speakers/panelists who engage with the Center. Our next opportunity lies in the audience to which we speak. By proactively identifying new demographic groups by age; a range of educational, race, and ethnic backgrounds; new geographies; and other factors, we can expand not just our programming but those it reaches and affects. Some strategies for achieving this might include more targeted publicity, relevant strategic partnerships, and when events resume in person, being thoughtful about venues/locations that might draw different and more diverse crowds. We currently track some demographic data through online registration, such as geographic location and affiliation to the Miller Center. We have been able to learn a little more about our audience—such as race and gender—through a recently conducted survey of our 2020 event participants. Viewership for 2020 related to our current online programming (March-December 2020) is yielding the following averages related to geographic diversity: approximately 50 percent local, 10 percent DC-based, 36 percent national, and an average of 4 percent international viewership (though on two occasions this number rose as high as 27–28 percent).
- Recruiting students and fellows: Budget constraints in recent years have not enabled the Miller Center to grow the total number of staff positions, however, we do have people flow in and out of the Center. The two most common categories are students and scholarly appointments (fellows and chairs). We've begun to prioritize diversity in its broadest terms in recruiting both groups and will continue to prioritize it. We see a great opportunity in growing the racial makeup of our community.
- Climate survey: It's important for us to consider each stakeholder's experience at the Center, because no single person can speak for an entire group and because our own perceptions are a result of our own experience, not others'. The Center conducted a new climate assessment to capture "my experience" for the range of faculty and staff across the organization at the end of calendar year 2020. We will use this as our baseline for future similar surveys. In 2020, 82 percent of respondents agreed or strongly agreed they felt like they "belong" at the Center. More than 60 percent of responses agreed or strongly agreed they had satisfying relationships and their professional goals were being met. More than 86 percent knew "what constitutes good performance" in their role and that they received "meaningful recognition" for their work. More than half, 57 percent, felt they could express their opinions at the Miller Center, and 75 percent believed the Miller Center leadership would "take appropriate action in response to incidents of harassment or discrimination"; none strongly disagreed with either statement. Every respondent had some confidence in his or her skills to address "hostile behavior" they witness. All of these responses indicate the community is building confidence in the climate. We received 27 responses to the survey: 81 percent of respondents identified as white, 7.4 percent as Asian or Asian American, 3.7 percent as Black, and 3.7 percent preferred not to say. Half of respondents were between ages 45 and 55, and 85 percent identified as heterosexual. For education, 29 percent of respondents reported having earned a bachelor's degree, 33 percent a master's, 8 percent a professional degree like law or medicine, and 29 percent a doctorate. Politically, 65 percent of respondents placed themselves on a scale as "liberal" and 11 percent as "conservative." For our question on religion, 30 percent had "no" religious preference and 30 percent preferred not to say. In the open text fields at the end of the survey, 4 of 7 relayed a concern that those with conservative views may not feel they can share their political affiliation. We are committed to making every person feel they can be their authentic self in the workplace.

Below are five Inclusive Excellence (IE) framework dimensions that constitute our IE plan. The greatest opportunities, listed above, often appear in more than one category, reinforcing the importance and prospective gain.

Goals, Actions, Measures, and Implementation Plan

Communication Plan

We communicated our draft IE plan to staff at a special presentation during a faculty and staff meeting in November 2020. Based on questions and feedback, we added an inclusivity training (March 2021) and edited the draft document to incorporate ideas from our community. We previewed this document with our board chair in March 2021 and we will share it with the Governing Council at the May 2021 board meeting. We will report progress to both groups and to the Division for Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion biennially beginning 2021. We will produce and distribute press releases, emails, and social media announcements for elements relative to the public. We will publish our Inclusive Excellence plan on the Miller Center website.

To stay up to date on and participate in the success of the IE plan, Miller Center community members can (a) read relevant documentation throughout the Inclusive Excellence section of the Center's network called Teams and (b) use the Center's anonymous feedback form to submit questions at any time.
